The human brain remembers negative experiences more easily than positive ones. Our brains have developed this way because threats, like dangerous animals, had a more immediate effect on our ancestors' survival compared to positive things like food or shelter. Research suggests that our level of happiness depends partly on factors we cannot control - our genes and our life circumstances. But our level of happiness is also shaped by the choices we make. If you have been chasing wealth, fame, good looks, material things and power, you may be looking for happiness at all the wrong places. People who make a habit of caring for the wellbeing of others tend to be happier. This might involve volunteering for an organization or reaching out to support friends and family on a regular basis. Also, people who exercise regularly improve both their physical and mental well-being. Some researches have shown that exercise can be as effective as medication in treating depression. People who think positively by being grateful, mindful and optimistic are more likely to be happy. Being grateful means being thankful. Being mindful means being open to, focusing on, and enjoying the experiences of the present moment. Being optimistic means being hopeful about the future.
