- Across all sectors and ranks, non – English – speakers face a harder hunt for fewer and poorer jobs. Many of the leading employers in Europe, including Vivendi Universal and CAP Gemini rarely even consider job applicants without English. Secretaries who lack English can expect to make 30% less – of they're luckily enough to find a job, says temporary – work agency Manpower Inc. And for headhunters such as Sarah Mulhern of spencer Stuart in Paris, English is not an option anymore: 'It's a requirement' She recalls working with one French technical whiz who didn't know English. She landed him a job at Excite – but only after he had completed an intensive language course.
