- The idea of Individualism came from Europe in the 16th century through the movement popularly known as Renaissance. Individualism, also known as Humanism, focused on the idea that human beings, as individuals, are capable of infinite things and have the choice of doing what they want. This was in opposition to the religious ideas that everything is controlled by destiny. These ideas of Individualism prevailed for a long time until people like Karl Marx and Sigmund Freud came up with opposing theories in the 19th century. Marx proposed that there is no free will, and we are controlled by our economic position. Freud proposed that we also have an unconscious mind which controls our conscious mind, thus complete free will does not exist.
