Q.5 Read the passage and answer the questions following it: (05)

The history of food items often represents cultural interactions in the past. The samosa, for example, is of Central Asian origin and used to have minced meat as stuffing. It came to India with the establishment of the Delhi Sultanate by kings from Central Asia in the 12th century. As we know, it has been customised with potato filling now. The journey of the samosa, and many such food preparations, symbolise how diverse cultures interacted and adapted to each other. Unfortunately, in the recent past, food choices have become the reason to target someone. The very thing that brought us together is now dividing us.

Questions:

- i) Describe the journey of the samosa.
- ii) Which words in the passage mean:
 - a) Cut into very small pieces
 - b) Made according to the consumers' needs
- iii) Give a suitable title to the passage

Q.6 Write a precis based on the following passage and suggest a suitable title: (05)

In the late 1990s, the plastic money market in India, comprising credit cards, smart cards, debit cards, charge cards, stored value cards and others picked up momentum like never before, growing at an annual rate of 25%. The reason for this is the rapidly increasing number of people who use debit cards. This confirmed the fact that the Indian market had finally realised the potential of plastic money.

However, this boom seems to be a disaster for the urban Indian in the future. An extensive survey has found that more and more households seem to be borrowing money not for creating assets like building a house or buying a car, but to meet basic consumption needs ranging from food, transport and medical bills to even repaying loans. Card can encourage the purchasing of goods and services one cannot really afford. This tosses up the major question – are we allowing credit cards to run our lives and our pockets. Using a credit or debit card inevitably involves an element of risk. A reckless use of credit cards can render one bankrupt. (180 words)
