The duty of judge is to hear and decide the issues raised by the two parties. A good judge should hold the balance between the two parties and find out the truth and thus, do justice.

He should not conduct an investigation or cross-examination. He should only be a silent observer and not an active participant. If he takes part in the argument, he ceases to be an umpire; he jumps into the area and in such circumstances his vision will be clouded by the dust of conflict. The judges should remain neutral and have a clear vision. Though justice has a bandage around her eyes her vision should be very clear to see which way the truth lies. She is blind only to favours and prejudice. She has the balance in her hand and the advocates put the weights one after the other into the pans of the balance tilts, however so slightly. The judge should interrupt only when some point has been over looked or left obscure. Patience and gravity of hearing are an essential part of justice; an over speaking judge drops the mantle of a judge assumes the robe of an advocate.

Every citizen has a right to obtain legal advice. This right cannot be defeated by resorting to the device of placing the detenué at a place where no interview is possible. The right to be represented by a counsel implies previous consultation and advice. No police officer should be allowed to hear the conversation between the prisoner and counsel. There is a distinction between a legal interview and an interview with friends and relations. Sometimes it is suggested that there is a risk of privilege being abused by the member of the Bar.
