Jawaharlal Nehru made his famous mid- night speech about India's tryst with destiny on the night of 14- 15th August 1947. Now, more than 50 years later, what has our destiny been? In some ways India's development since independence is commendable, may be unique. Yet in other areas, our achievements have been disappointing. On the credit side India has acquired considerable capability in industry and manufacturing. Health services have improved. Longevity has increased, agricultural output has increased. The economy has grown. The green revolution did away with our dependence on imports of wheat from the U.S. From chronic food deficits, we have reached agricultural self- sufficiency. But we still hear of starvation deaths in certain pockets of the country, partly due to mal- distribution, but mostly due to lack of purchasing power. Human development indices are still low. Birth rate is still high and so is infant mortality rate compared to the developed nations. With increasing population, overcrowding in city slums and unemployment are perennial problems. But India is among the top three nations with the largest trained technical force of engineers and scientists. The task before us is extremely challenging. A new wind is blowing. Very soon India will become a power to reckon with.

Questions:

- a) What according to the author has been India's destiny more than 60 years after Independence?
- b) What have we acquired on the credit side?
- c) Which are the disappointing aspects?
- d) How can you contribute to the development of the nations?
