On the other hand the word 'person' will have altogether different interpretation so far as the criminal law is concerned. In the Criminal Jurisdiction the State has been placed at a different pedestal as the protector of the social justice and hence the exclusion of State from the purview of the word 'person' used in S 397 (3), Cr. - Q.2 Read the passage & answer the questions given below it (15)

Life on the African plain was very much at the mercy of the different weather seasons. The dry seasons meant lean times, and many animals had to be content with tough, low – quality vegetation, which was the only food around in any quantity. But our ancestors did not go on depending on this poor quality food. They began looking for new opportunities to get tasty food. What they discovered was that the African plains contained plants that hid their juicier parts underground. In the dry season, when other edible plants above ground grew scarce, the roots and bulbs of these special plants provided rich and healthy eating – but all of it below the surface, available only to animals that could claw it out. Lacking the specialized claws and teeth needed to get at these prized foods, our ancestors learnt how to fashion a stick or stone to dig out the succulent roots of plants.

By now our ancestors were clearly acquiring an even more valuable skill, that of knowledge – not just in knowing how to make simple instruments, but in knowing their own habitat in close detail. They came to recognize the habits of other creatures, and to turn them to their advantages. Circling vultures promised the remains of some animal killed not far away, a meal for the taking if they got there soon enough. They knew that adult antelopes, while impossible to catch, sometimes left their young in grass and went off to browse. Our hungry ancestors could pluck the infant like ready fruit, if they knew where to look.

If we are to be successful in retaining democratic institutions and expanding their meaning, we must be clear about the meaning of democratic ideas, we must make those ideas persuasive and we must above everything make them an integral part of our daily lives. If democracy is to mean any thing, it must have respect for the common man and not use him cynically as a pawn in the political game. The Manipulative approach sees, the common people only as so much material to be used. It has no more respect for that material than it would have for counters in any game.
