Translate the following paragraph in to Hindi or Marathi.

Studies have convinced penologists that confinement, even in the best managed institutions, has serious drawbacks: the longer the period of confinement, the greater the sociological and psychological harm to an individual's personality. Delocalization and the closely regulated regime of institutions accentuated the inmate's sense of social inadequacy. When such a person is released after being out of touch with the outside world for years, he finds himself thrust into an alien situation, unable to take decisions or enter into satisfactory personal relationships.
