It is clear that language is used for more than one purpose. The man who hits his thumb-nail with a hammer and utters a string of curses is using language to relieve his feeling and needs no audience but himself. But when the philosopher used language to clarify his ideas on a subject, he is using it as an instrument of thought. When two women gossip over the fence, or two men exchange greetings as they pass in the street, language is being used to strengthen the bonds between the members of a society. Language, it seems, is a multipurpose instrument. One function, however, seems to be basic: language enables us to influence people's behaviour, and thereby makes human cooperation possible. Some animals cooperate, especially the social animals like bees and ants; but human cooperation is more thorough, more detailed more effective than that found anywhere in the animal kingdom. This human cooperation would be unthinkable without language.

Questions:

- a) Why is language called a multipurpose instrument?
- b) What are the purposes for which language is used?
- c) What is the basic function of language?
- d) How is human cooperation different from cooperation among bees and ants?
- e) How does a philosopher use language.

- Our country is facing a severe environmental crisis. If it is not tackled on a warfooting, it will certainly lead to socio-economic and ecological disaster, which will seriously affect the lives of millions of people, especially the poor. Government data usually understates the extent of environmental destructions. The recent satellite data has revealed that India is losing millions of hectares of forest every year which is many times more than the annual rate of deforestation put out by the forest department.
