Climate change has no border or bias. It does not care whether you are rich or poor, big or small. Last month world's second largest emitter of greenhouse gases, the US withdrew from the Paris Climate Agreement. It now becomes even more relevant for the rest of the world to accelerate their efforts towards climate change mitigation and adaptation.

India has taken the lead by firming up its stance to follow a low carbon growth trajectory to fulfill the aspirations of its growing economy.

Influential global conglomerates and business houses have recognized the threat climate change poses to their survival over the longer term. This is the silver lining and has set the tone of these large organizations.

- 2) Why do you think US withdrew from the Paris climate agreement?
- 3) How does climate change affect business?
- 4) Write the opposites of relevant and recognized.

- Q.5 Write a precise of the passage given. Give a suitable title to it. (10)

Who is a good human being? Charles Dickens said people were good and bad but he couldn't figure out what made them that way. Unfortunately Dickens missed by about fifty years – the revolution in Psychology brought by Sigmund Freud. Freud believed an individual's personality was shaped in his infancy, with later influences having only a negotiable impact. However Freud erred in focusing on natural instincts to the exclusion of social structures. A good human being is honest to himself and sensitive to the needs of others. An emotionally honest person is a product of an upbringing that infuses a sense of self-worth. People can lack self-worth because of some kind of Freudian rejection in their infancy. To overcome their feeling of smallness or insecurity they control even with good intentions those emotionally or socially weaker than them. Control distorts love and goodness.

Q.5 Read the passage and answer the questions following it: (05)

Othello, Macbeth, Hamlet and King Lear are known as the Four Great Tragedies of Shakespeare. Their greatest quality is that they are tragedies because their heroes have a fatal flaw. Othello had an inferiority complex due to his dark complexion; Macbeth was over-ambitious; Hamlet was indecisive; and King Lear was proud. These flaws result in tragic consequences. Centuries earlier, Aristotle had defined this idea of a fatal flaw as 'Hamartia'. However, before Shakespeare, most tragedies focussed on an ideal hero who was dragged into tragic circumstances by an evil villain. Shakespeare dived into the psychologies of his heroes, made them their own enemy and gave a new dimension to the idea of 'tragedy'.

Questions:

- i) What were the fatal flaws of Othello, Macbeth, Hamlet and King Lear?
- ii) Which words in the passage mean:
 - a) Something that would certainly result in death
 - b) The colour of one's skin
- iii) Give a suitable title to the passage.

Q.6 Write a precis based on the following passage and suggest a suitable title: (05)

Human language abounds with expressions, which extend the association of the head with power and authority. Metaphors like 'heads will roll' and 'have someone's head on a platter' are examples from the English language, which signify the divestment of power and authority through the removal of the head from the body.

In tribal societies, the symbolism associated with the head is extended to animal heads too and this has both a profane and a sacred significance. For example, in Naga villages when animals are slaughtered for community feasts, the head of the biggest animal is always given to the chief or the headman as a token to recognition of his status in the community. The Ao tribe still follows a traditional custom of sending back the head of a big animal like a pig to the person who sent it as a gift in acknowledgment of his ownership of the animal. In another Naga tribe called Sangtam, the heads of chickens or even fish heads cannot be eaten by anyone else except the head of the family, i.e. the father. In these examples, one sees the significance of the human head in the history and civilization of the different races of the world. (202 words)
