Honesty and integrity are two different things. We often confuse them. Honesty is being truthful when someone is watching. It operates on the logic of fear. For instance, we won't violate a traffic signal if a policeman is standing right there. Law in general performs the function of being a guardian of honesty and morality. Integrity is being truthful even when no one is watching. For example, following traffic rules even late at night when there are no other vehicles or police, or not cheating when the invigilator is busy with something. Integrity operates on the logic of inner voice. If our inner voices are constructed on values, we won't require fear to be honest.

Cinema is often considered a means of entertainment only. However, we underestimate the larger functions it performs. These functions can be understood in two ways: psychological and socio-political. The first function can be understood from the fact that cinema recreates an experience for us. We live the story from the characters' perspectives when we watch a film. This forces us to give up our own worldview for a while and see things in a different way. Consequently, we examine our own worldviews neutrally and critically. A film like Fandry or Pink, for example, help us see the world from a Dalit's or a woman's perspective. The second function can be observed in the fact that films drive us to analyse our society. They help us see the larger condition in which the people of our country exist and provoke us to reassess ourselves. Films like Rang De Basanti express the restlessness in the minds of youth and those like Jolly LL.B. show how corruption and immorality has become a norm. Films are thus much more than mere entertainment. (179 words)

Q.7 Write an essay in 350 words on ANY ONE of the given topics. (10)
