Vedas came into existence long before writing was invented but their text has been preserved and transmitted to us unimpaired. This became possible for not only was the text memorised with great accuracy but with a view to establish the text and prevent interpolations, every word and syllable had been counted. We learn that the number of words in the Samhita is 1,53,826 and that of the syllable 4,32,000 contained in 10,622 verses. The Vedic Religion as depicted in the Vedas is extremely simple, consisting of worship of trinity of Gods – the Fire-God Agni, the Rain-God Indra and the Sun-God Surya (or Savita). There are other Gods such as Vayu (wind), Maruts (Storm God) and Ushas (dawn). The head of the household is its spiritual representative and leader.
