Translate the following into Hindi or Marathi:

Concentration is that fragile ability that disappears during an emotional turbulence. When we concentrate, there is an increase in the frequency or velocity of our brain waves. The pupils dilate, palms begin to sweat and the heartbeat becomes more variable, slowing down in moments just prior to concentration, speeding up once we actually begin to work. People say to concentrate we must relax, but the truth is that the earlier stages are characterized by a slight level of anxiety. This stage is triggered by the release of noradrenalin, a hormone secreted in much greater quantity at times of other emotional extremes, fear or rage.
